WASHINGTON LECTER.

Washingron, D. C., Dec. 24, 1877.

The two notable political affairs of the last week were Blaine's free expression of opinion at St. Louis and Everts' administration speech at the New England dioner in New York. Both point to an aucompromising fight in the Republican party. Blaine was emphatic. Evarts was emphatic. The latter did not allude to the Southern question, to be sure, which Blaine made the burden of his remarks, but he said there would be no turning reissues himself to each man. Besides brekward in the Administration's civil 250 regular stock hands, I am conservice "reform," and that meant further warfare on Conkling. The days of a united Republican party are over.
